

Munster Match nets Winners all around!

To help raise money for cancer research, the Munster High School Girls' Volleyball Team hosted a "Kills Against Cancer" game. Players secured pledges from family and friends for each "kill" that the Munster varsity team had during a match against Hobart. A "kill" is a hit in volleyball that the opponent does not touch or only touches once and a point is scored. For each kill, some people pledged a quarter and some pledged $1. Some people also gave donations at the match that night. In all, the team raised $546.36 from the fundraiser.

"We have had many families in the volleyball program directly affected by various cancers and we wanted to show that we care and wanted to make a difference," said Coach Tracy Summers. "We played Hobart that night and asked them to wear jerseys that were pink (representing breast cancer). We did the same thing as well. We decorated the gym with balloons and posters that represented different cancers. We also had a poster on the wall in which people could write notes to loved ones that were struggling with cancer or who had left us," she said.
